Davivienda Investment Advisor USA, LLC (“Davivienda Advisors”, “DA” or “us”) is registered as an Investment Advisor with the US Securities and Exchange Commission. Please note that registration of an investment adviser does not imply that DA or any of our principals or employees possesses a particular level of skill or training. Also, it does not imply and should not be interpreted that the SEC or any other regulatory body have approved and/or reviewed the material contained in this website.

DA may use Promotion Agents that will promote our services and may encourage clients to establish relationships with us. If you have been referred or our services were promoted by Corredores Davivienda or any other affiliate of DA, they may receive compensation for this referral/promotion. In this regard, this is a conflict of interest as they will be compensated if you establish a relationship with us. Please be sure to read Section 18 Disclosure Acknowledgement in the Discretionary Investment Management Agreement prior to establishing your relationship, where you will be able to review and understand the existence of a compensation agreement. Take this into consideration when deciding to open a relationship with us.

DA does not have custody of any asset, nor does it perform any valuation of assets and/or securities. Currently our digital platform uses Interactive Brokers as qualified custodian.

Please note that all investments in securities involve risk, and there is no guarantee that a particular investment recommended by DA will result in profits (or avoid losses). Please note that specific products may have individual costs, risks and characteristics. As a result, while we will explain all costs and fees associated with a specific investment, please ensure that you read all relevant material and understand the risk characteristics, fees, and costs associated with implementing the given recommendations.

Equities and equity mutual funds are subject to the risk of rising and falling stock prices and have tended to be more volatile than mutual funds that invest in fixed income securities. Mutual funds concentrated in an economic sector or geographical region will also be more volatile, so too are mutual funds concentrated in non-US investments versus U.S. based investments. Offshore mutual funds are subject to the same market risks as onshore mutual funds, such as general economic conditions and company and industry prospects. However, offshore mutual funds may be subjected to higher degree of loss due to political, economic, legal, regulatory, and operational uncertainties, differing accounting and financial reporting standards, limited availability of information, currency conversion, and pricing factors affecting investment in the securities of foreign businesses or governments. Bond mutual funds fluctuate in value with changes in interest rates, and lower-rated bonds involve higher credit risk and may be speculative investments. Trading in Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs) involve risks including the potential for losses. Leveraged and Inverse ETFs are also risky and may increase exposure to volatility through the use of leverage, short sales of securities, derivatives and other complex investment strategies.

International investing involves a greater degree of risk and increased volatility. Changes in currency exchange rates and differences in accounting and taxation policies outside your country can increase or diminish returns. Overseas markets may not be as politically and economically stable.

Certain products and services may not be available to investors residing in certain jurisdictions or States of the United States and a conflict of interest exists where an affiliate of DA receives compensation regardless of the profit or loss in the account. Any revenue sharing arrangement also presents a conflict of interest as payments may incentive our affiliates to recommend our services.

Past performance is no guarantee of current or future results. Investment products may be subject to investment risks involving, but not limited to, possible loss of all or part of the principal invested. It is important to note the investment products discussed herein are subject to among other things, availability, change in price, market conditions, interest rate, liquidity, and credit risk. Market values can fluctuate daily due to economic and other events such as natural disasters, health crises, terrorism, conflicts and social unrest that affect markets, economies, countries, companies or governments.

Please be aware that investment products are not FDIC Insured, not bank guaranteed and may lose value.
